Corris Railway Safety Policy

The Directors of the Corris Railway place the utmost importance on the Health, Safety and Welfare at work of their staff. Their Policy is to minimise the health and safety risks involved in operating the railway. This includes risks to its staff, to its customers and to the local community. The Directors undertake to provide such resources, information, training and supervision as is necessary for these purposes.

The responsibilities of managers and supervisors to maintain high standards of health and safety are on a par with their operating responsibilities. In particular, the Board requires its managers and supervisors to assess the potential risks to all its staff, customers and the community and to take such actions as are reasonably practicable to minimise those risks.

It is the Board's continuing aim to make the Company a safer organisation in which to work and, to this end, it requires a high standard of individual commitment from management and staff alike. To support this a Company Health and Safety Officer is appointed with specific responsibility for ensuring safe operation of the Company's activities.

The Board welcomes the involvement of Company's staff in the promotion and development of measures to minimise the risk to the health and safety of all involved in the Company's operations. Volunteers are considered in respect to the Health and Safety Policy to be part of the Company's staff.

It is the Board's belief that the required high standard of health and safety can only be achieved if every member of staff accepts a personal responsibility for the prevention of injury and loss to themselves and to others. To this end the Board requires all staff to comply with the Company's Safety Management System.
